RISKS

Investing in mutual funds may expose investors to risks which can cause the value and marketability of their investment to decline or to fluctuate. Such risks include liquidity risks, credit risk, default risk, currency risks; interest rate risks; changes in government policies; shifts in the economy; changes in applicable laws and regulations; and changes in the underlying securities which make up the portfolio of Republic Family of Funds securities. The small sizes and relative illiquidity of Caribbean stock markets, which are emerging markets and tend to be exposed to more risk and volatility than established markets, add to the risks of investment.
